-I’d say the most important skill to pass to the children is Money Laundering.

-I’m not sure I know what that is.

-Easy! You got some cash squirelled here or there? Let’s say you yachted back from Nicaragua with duffels full of green.

-Let’s not say that. Sounds druggy.

-IRS might get that idea anyway.

-About me? I’m clean as a hound’s tooth!

-The more of a challenge for them! At any rate, let’s move those smelly simoleons into Excelsior Real Estate Trust. Just your modern crooked business, so IRS quickly bored.

-They move on from me?

-Of course! Let’s keep you out of Leavenworth. The tennis pro is sewed up with years of lessons!

Somebody must die!

-And what do these real estate pros do?

-Your average slumlording. Grinding what’s left of the faces of the poor.

-How lovely!

-Don’t worry. Their brochure sounds like Mother Teresa.
